

Planar decomposition of graphs

Laura Sheppardson
Department of Mathematics
University of Mississippi

We have fairly strong results on long paths and cycles in graphs which are planar, or embedded in low-genus surfaces. One way to find paths and cycles in more general graphs is to decompose them into planar subgraphs. We'll look at several different approaches to such a decomposition. Results already obtained by a standard surgery method will be presented, and the promise of other methods considered.